Kailash Satyarthi, original name Kailash Sharma, (born January 11, 1954, Vidisha, Madhya Pradesh, India) In 2014 he was the corecipient of the Nobel Peace Prize “for their struggle against the suppression of children and young people and for the right of all children to education.”

Satyarthi established a magazine, Sangharsh Jaari Rahega (“The Struggle Will Continue”), which documented the lives of vulnerable people. He grew increasingly concerned by the prevalence of child labour in India, which was regulated only by a sparse patchwork of legislation. Pervasive poverty frequently led to the repayment of parental debt through the bonded servitude of their children. Satyarthi began working under the tutelage of Swami Agnivesh, an Arya Samaj adherent and activist who advocated on behalf of women and children. He later broke away from the more religiously motivated activism of his mentor and in 1980 founded the nonprofit Bachpan Bachao Andolan (BBA; “Save the Childhood Movement”). Agnivesh, with whom Satyarthi retained an alternately close and antagonistic relationship, founded the more legislatively focused Bandhua Mukti Morcha (BMM; “Bonded Labour Liberation Front”) in 1981.

Bal Mitra Gram (BMG), a program for “child friendly” villages in which child labour was banned and all children were enrolled in school, was launched in 2011, and several years later some 350 villages had adopted it

In 1999 Satyarthi was among the cofounders of the Global Campaign for Education, which championed education as a universal human right, and in 2001 he became a founding member of the UNESCO High-Level Group on Education for All. Let us march from ignorance to awakening. Let us march from darkness to light. Let us march from mortality to divinity.
